in the context of current environment and demographic issues. (1994, p. 98). To address these practical issues, it is essential to understand the information collected and how it can be used to inform decision-making and policy development. The relevance of the data collected and the importance of ensuring its accuracy and reliability are crucial.

The Introduction chapter (IFC) focuses on essential prerequisites to the problem statement. It introduces the context of the research and the need to address the challenges faced by stakeholders. The effectiveness of the responses depends on the quality of the data collected and the appropriateness of the strategies employed.

"It is not the critic who counts; not the man who points out how the strong man stumbles, or where the doer of the deed stumbles. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena, whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood, who strives plain and unafraid. And that's what I want. I do not want the man who 쉰
